Hi Amy, I have been seeing this post about a hot dip galvanizing plant being located just outside our community here at Gleneagle. I am sure you have had hundreds of emails about what a bad idea this would be. Although I am sure there will be restrictions and strict regulations on them for air quality and such. Those never seem to mean anything when money is involved, just ask the folks that all got cancer from PG&E, ask all the people that got cancer from Dupont, the list goes on and on. I feel like this would be a game changer in Arlington, and property values would go down dramatically in the area of this plant. The progress that has already happened in Arlington has done a lot of good, and I feel like this would set things backwards. I do realize this is in the industrial area, but with so many families right across the street, it's just a bad idea. I hope the city will reconsider this and not let them be there.

Thanks
